Vinification and Maturation

On arrival at the winery, the grapes are delicately crushed, and the juice then remains in a short maceration. After a static sedimentation, the must undergoes its alcoholic fermentation, 30% in stainless steel, 30% in big barrel and 40% in French oak barriques (used 3 or 4 times previously), where periodic bâtonnage is carried out for 6 months.

Tasting Notes

The nose is complex, mineral, yet deep, with aromas of wildflowers (elderflower, iris, and chamomile). On the palate it is rich, complex, and multi-layered, with an almondy aftertaste. With time, these notes transform into even more complex sensations.

The Story of the Label

The label features two heads, based on those originally created by the English architect Inigo Jones (1573-1652), the first representative in Britain of architecture in the classic style, inspired by Italian models, Palladio and Scamozzi in particular. This image is so important to us that it has become our company's logo: the expressions on the two faces, which originally had to do with love, here represent the two faces of wine: the sacred, meditative one on the right, and the profane, euphorically inebriated one on the left. Wine, a perfect symbol of the essence of a human being, may – depending on the conditions – be sacred, religious or bacchanalian.
