

PARANGA

Vintage 2025

Dry white wine from the indigenous Greek varieties of Malagousia & Roditis

In our glass

Bright pale lemon color. On the nose, the delicious peach and intense floral notes of Malagousia are beautifully matched with the fresh green fruit and citrus aromas of Roditis. Fruit-forward mouth with crispness and a lovely refreshing finish.

The joy of wine

Shared with friends. As a glass of wine at home with a snack or at our favorite wine bar. When many different flavors and cuisines hit our table, PARANGA White is an exceptional choice.

The sommelier within

PARANGA White is a blend of two indigenous Greek varieties – Malagousia and Roditis-grown on selected vineyards in Northern Greece. The stunning terrain diversity of the region that combines mountains, sea and lakes shapes great conditions for viticulture. Of course, the commitment and hard work of our partner vine growers is key, as well as the strict selection of vine parcels and grapes during harvest.

More about the blend: Malagousia, because of the rich aromas, character and layers it may add to the wine. Roditis for the clean, lemony aromas with the subtle minelar hints and the vibrant acidity.

At the winery, each variety is fermented separately in stainless steel tanks. When fermentation is completed, our oenologist, after many tastings, creates the final blend that is transferred to new tanks. The wine stays there in contact with its fine lees for up to 4 months. During that time, mild stirring takes place to enhance the texture and complexity of the wine.

PARANGA REPUBLIK

It all started back in MMIV (2004) when PARANGA Red was introduced to the Greek Wine market. The unexpected name of the wine (paranga means “shack” in Greek) bore the mark of its creator, the maverick and unconventional winemaker (kir) Yiannis Boutaris. Over the years, PARANGA have been shaping a movement that moved away from wine snobbery offering a quality Greek wine equally at home in any setting.

Today, PARANGA REPUBLIK is exactly that. Wine free of preconceptions to be enjoyed however each of us chooses.
